PUBLIC WORKS

Oceanside Harbor – Encouraging Seaworthy/Good Appearance/Environmentally Safe Vessels - Oceanside Harbor Code requires vessels to be in good appearance, seaworthy and environmentally safe and sound. Four years ago, the Harbor had over 100 vessels in very poor condition (see photos below). In order for a vessel to be “seaworthy” it must be capable of being navigated out of the Harbor into open waters in a relatively quick timeframe. If an operator can’t easily move about the deck of a vessel due to storage, tarps and other non-navigational items, then the vessel is not considered seaworthy. Another important issue for Oceanside Harbor is to protect air and water quality. When the painted fiberglass surface is not maintained by regular cleaning and occasional buffing and wax, the surface begins to oxidize, releasing volatile organic compounds into the water and air.

Harbor staff has taken a measured approach to requiring vessel owners to meet these standards. One of the ways has been to review these issues during the three-year vessel inspection, and then set-up a plan with the owner to improve the vessel's condition. Another way has been to require compliance to these issues as a condition of transferring the slip when the vessel is offered for sale. Just a few years ago, one out of every 10 vessels were in very poor appearance. Today there is less than a handful of vessels requiring improvements.
